

Keeping To a Budget

When talking about home improvements or extensions, you must stay in focus about keeping your budget intact. Do not do any unnecessary expenses since this can mean a headache later on. Probably, before you dive into home improvements or extensions, you have a rough estimate about the building cost which you can make use of as the basis for your project budget. Although this is generally a good starting point, you need to understand the fact that renovation project is unique, hence, you can find yourself being stung with additional costs later on and you may want to extend your budget a little more.

Get a Fixed-Price Quotation so you can fully stay in control of your budget. Go for a quotation that specifies everything so you don't have to worry about tiny details later on. It's a must for you to scan through the quotation document carefully. In case you see that there is an aspect which is not listed, then ask the person behind to include it. After which, you can ask the builder if you can tweak some of the plan in order to make it affordable. Shop around and compare quotes, with the aim to save a little. However always bear in mind that cheap isn't always better. Ultimately it proves better value to go with your instincts, or at least the company that appears to be the most trustworthy.

Address construction issues before they even begin; seek the help of a Construction Supervisor who is tasked to oversee the trade contractors who are all working on your project. As a supervisor, he will ensure that construction times as well as quality are achieved. Also, he should be able to address all of your concerns about the construction so prevent problems from coming along the way which can in fact create an effect to the total cost.
